	The buffer according to document D1 is considered the prior art closest to the claimed subject matter. Document D1 consists of two interlocking U-shaped parts (20, 30) which enclose an elastic damping element (50). The legs of the two U-shaped parts are not straight and have angular ends (80, 80') to ensure the cohesion of the overall unit. The claimed subject matter therefore differs from the known buffer in that the legs of the U-shaped parts converge or diverge and that in this way an appropriate clamping action is achieved. This replaces the angular ends according to the prior art. The claimed subject matter is therefore novel (PCT Article 33(2)). The problem to be solved by the present invention is understood to lie in the fact that the known buffer easily jams when it is subjected to excentric forces. The solution suggested in the claims of the present application avoids this effect by a conical embodiment of the two buffer parts (see also figure 2 of the application). Neither document D1, the remainder of the available prior art, nor the general knowledge a person skilled in the art is likely to have, offers anything to suggest the claimed solution. Consequently, this solution involves an inventive step (PCT Article 33(3)).

Claims 2 to 5 are dependent on claim 1 and therefore likewise meet the PCT requirements for novelty and inventive step.

Box No. VII Certain defects in the international application

The following defects in the form or contents of the international application have been noted:

In the claims, the U-shaped parts and their legs differ only by their respective reference signs. This can lead to problems with interpretation, since reference signs invariably have only an explanatory function (PCT Article 6). It would have been better to distinguish between first and second U-shaped parts and corresponding first and second legs.

The closest prior art should have been cited briefly.
